Story

The Cosmos turned the fate of the Earth's inhabitants every day.

Elasaid didn't believe in astrology but the force of the planets and constellations entered into her life and many previous lives regardless of what she thought.

After getting hit by a blast in the London riots she falls into a coma. In the coma's sub-conscious she experiences a past life as a Highland Warrior where, after reading a passage of ancient text from a magic book, an underworld portal opens.

Terrifying clawed beasts, the Flying Furies, clutch Elasaid and throw her through this first portal of The Seven Chambers.

Her only escape is to navigate her way to the Seventh Chamber in time for the rising of the phoenix along the passageways and chambers for the souls of the dead.

Along the way she battles with fallen angels, jealous planets, tricky alchemists and manipulative lost souls.

Overcoming the darkness in the chambers opens her heart to a lost soul, but the lost soul has been sentenced to spend eternity in the chambers.

What will prevail; her love for the lost soul or her desire for freedom?

Albion would have done nothing had some other nation imposed such outrages on us?" She shakes her head. "No, ladies. I say it has been long past time for us to accept that Columbia's complaint is justified, and to sue for peace. What possible good does it do for us to feed ships and regiments into this pointless sideshow when Callista Bellaroque still styles herself "Empress of the Gauls" and threatens the peace of the world with an army of nearly a million fighting women?"

"Peace will not come cheap," Lieutenant Fisher notes from the other side of your cramped dining cabin. "The Columbians have an unceasing greed for territory, that is the real reason why they started this war. They would most certainly demand our colonies to their north as compensation."

"A small price for an end to this needless distraction, surely!" Bannister answers vehemently. "What will we stand to lose save for a few acres of snow?"

"What will we stand to lose?" Fisher replies, cheeks flushed with indignation. "Our reputation! Our honor! Our security! Once it becomes known that Albion might be successfully bullied by any Harriet, Hester, or Tamsin, every nation which has ever coveted anything of ours shall know it is the hour for plunder. It may only be a few acres of snow to Columbia today, but what about tomorrow when Iberia demands the Rum Islands, or the day after that, when Zollern clamors to annex Hibernia?"

- Bannister is right: we must have peace.
- Fisher is right: Albion cannot be seen as weak.
- If discussion of politics leads to such intemperate disputes, then it must stop.
